

DEDICATION

Byron G. Stier

The Southwestern Law Review dedicates this Symposium issue to the late Professor Alan Calnan and to the late Professor Francis McGovern, both of whom passed away following the Symposium.

Professor Calnan was an enthusiastic and highly engaged teacher and colleague and a prolific tort scholar. As a longstanding member of the Southwestern faculty for 30 years, he was a treasured part of our Southwestern family.

A professor at Duke University School of Law, Professor McGovern was renowned as the country's leading special master in mass tort litigation. His wide-reaching influence in both academia and the courts is unparalleled in the history of mass tort litigation in the United States.

We were honored to have Professor Calnan involved as Co-Chair of this Symposium and a speaker, and Professor McGovern involved as a speaker, and we are honored to present in this issue Professor Calnan's related article and a transcript of Professor McGovern's remarks at the Symposium.
